

Hood Canal Coordinating Council

Jefferson, Kitsap & Mason Counties; Port Gamble S'Klallam & Skokomish Tribes

The success of our work relies on building and maintaining trust with our member governments, our partners, and the public. HCCC strives for transparency in open public meetings, accessible organizational documents and records, reports to funders, and annual financial audits, all of which are made available on our websites: HCCC.wa.gov and OurHoodCanal.org.

There are real-time benefits when our members work together to share information, identify needs and solutions, and make collaborative decisions, striving to represent the best interests of stakeholders and the public.

Our work relies on partnerships to enhance our efforts, put our strategic approach into action, and achieve more robust and timely accomplishments.

Integrity is a cornerstone of HCCC's success, as we rely on scientific analyses, accurate and up-to-date information, and objectivity for use in strategic decision-making.

A healthy Hood Canal ecosystem balances habitat protection and recovery efforts while supporting our communities by providing clean water, local food, cultural and recreational opportunities, and the resources for sustainable economy that all contribute to a sense of place and Hood Canal identity.

Innovation and adaptation contributed to the development and continual improvement of the Hood Canal Integrated Watershed Plan – our guiding strategic approach that identifies priorities and directs implementation of our shared vision.
